

VELUSE AGENCY STANDARD OPERATING PROCEDURE (SOP) DEPARTMENT:

Marketing & Content Acquisition

SUBJECT: The Content Engine Framework
PURPOSE: To establish Veluse Agency's protocol for generating high-leverage, authoritative organic content for both our internal agency brand and our Med Spa clients. We do not waste time brainstorming theoretical concepts; we build bulletproof trust by turning our daily operational reality into a scalable media machine.

PART 1: THE "DOCUMENT, DON'T CREATE" PHILOSOPHY

The biggest mistake business owners make when trying to scale their organic presence is transitioning into "teacher mode" and trying to invent theoretical content 1. To build a massive brand, the content must be rooted in actual execution. The overarching rule is: Do epic stuff, then talk about what you did 2, 3.

If you are struggling to come up with ideas, you do not need a brainstorming session; you need to look at your daily schedule.

- The Calendar Hack: Look at your calendar and review every single meeting or client interaction you had that week 4. If a Med Spa owner had a consultation where a patient was confused about Botox vs. Fillers, or if our agency had a meeting about fixing a broken AI-booking funnel, that is the content.
- The Execution: You say, "I had this meeting, and my client had this specific issue... and this is exactly what we did to fix it" 4.
- The Mindset: By documenting your mistakes, lessons, and client victories in real-time, you essentially turn your operational exhaust into a marketing asset. This requires far less mental bandwidth than "creating" and automatically generates highly relevant material that proves your competence. Capture the concept, don't create it 5.

PART 2: THE "HOW I" VS. "HOW TO" PARADIGM SHIFT

This is the single most important psychological shift in content creation. We must universally ban the phrase "How To" from our consultants' and clients' content vocabulary, replacing it entirely with "How I" (or "How We").

- The Problem with "How To": When you tell a stranger "This is the best way to do X," it often comes off as arrogant, preachy, or overly prescriptive 6, 7. Furthermore, if you are teaching theory, people will constantly challenge your authority and ask, "Why should I listen to you?" 5, 8.
- The Power of "How I": When you switch your framing to "These are my favorite ways" or "Here is what I did," you instantly become bulletproof 6. No one can debate your lived experience 6.

Veluse Agency / Med Spa Application:

- Weak (How To): "How to clear your acne in 30 days." (Invites skepticism from dermatologists and internet trolls).
- Powerful (How I): "How I helped my client Sarah clear her severe cystic acne in 30 days using this specific chemical peel." (A documented fact that cannot be argued with, providing massive value and proof) 9.

By speaking strictly from experience and documenting what you did, you share value without triggering the prospect's defensive ego 7.

PART 3: THE ANATOMY OF A VIRAL SHORT (THE 4-PART FRAMEWORK)

While long-form content builds deep relationships, short-form content is the ultimate top-of-funnel awareness engine. However, we do not rely on luck or dancing trends. We structure every single short-form video (Reels, TikToks, YouTube Shorts) using Alex Hormozi's exact 4-part conversion architecture 10:

1. The Hook / Question You must grab attention in the first 3 seconds, or the rest of the video is useless. The hook must embed a question in the viewer's mind or state a hyper-specific problem they are facing to stop the scroll 10, 11.

- Execution: "Why are you spending thousands on Facebook ads but your Med Spa waiting room is still empty?"

2. The Hammer Do not drag out the answer. Immediately after the hook, drop "The Hammer"—the absolute core truth, punchline, or highly-converting quote that solves the premise 10. In Alex's workflow, the "Hammer" is often a proven, high-performing written Tweet simply spoken aloud 10.

- Execution: "Because people don't buy the laser machine; they buy the confidence of looking 10 years younger."

3. The Example Instantly ground the "Hammer" in reality so the viewer's logical brain accepts it 10. Use a brief, vivid story or analogy.

- Execution: "Think about it like buying a plane ticket. Nobody cares about the turbulence or the TSA line; they only care about arriving in Maui. You are selling the plane flight when you should be selling the vacation."

4. The Explanation Wrap up the short by explaining exactly why the example proves the rule, tying it back to the viewer's life and cementing the lesson 10.

- Execution: "When you stop marketing the technical features of your laser treatments, and start marketing the exact emotional outcome your patient desires, your booking rate will triple. Focus on the vacation."

Managerial Directive: Enforce this exact structure for all internal Veluse Agency content and all scripts provided to our Med Spa clients. It compresses maximum value into minimum time, ensuring high retention and algorithmic success.
