

VELUSE AGENCY STANDARD OPERATING PROCEDURE (SOP)
DEPARTMENT: Sales & Revenue
SUBJECT: The Conviction Transfer Audit
PURPOSE: To establish Veluse Agency's protocol for building, auditing, and transferring absolute conviction. Skill without conviction is useless. We must systematically engineer our consultants to possess an unshakable belief in our Med Spa AI and marketing infrastructure, ensuring that belief transfers seamlessly to the prospect.

PART 1: THE "EMPTY CUP" VS. "FULL CUP" ANALOGY

At its core, sales is simply a transference of conviction over a bridge of trust 1-4. Imagine the prospect has a "belief bubble" or cup over their head. When they enter the sales call, their cup is completely empty, or worse, filled with negative doubt 5. As the closer, your job is to pour your belief into their cup. However, how can you transfer belief if your cup is only one-third full 3? You cannot pour an empty cup into another empty cup and expect it to reach the threshold required for a prospect to make a high-ticket purchasing decision 3. We do not treat belief as a binary "yes or no" question. Belief is a continuum from 1 to 100 2, 5, 6. Even if your technical sales skill is a 2 out of 10, if your conviction level is a 100, you will close deals because prospects can sense your absolute certainty that your solution will solve their problem 2.

PART 2: SELLING YOURSELF FIRST

The person doing the converting can never believe less in the product than the person being converted 7. To achieve this, you must sell yourself on Veluse Agency's infrastructure before you ever attempt to sell a Med Spa owner.

When you look at yourself in the mirror at night, your conviction in what we deliver must be "balls to bones" unshakable 8-11. You must ask yourself the ultimate litmus test: Would I bet $10,000 on this product? Would I sell this product to my own mother? 12-14. If you can answer yes, you will have no problem closing deals because your ethical obligation to help the prospect will override your fear of asking hard questions 12-15. The person who cares the most about the prospect wins the sale 16-18.

PART 3: DAILY HABITS TO INCREASE "BELIEF VOLUME"

A closer's conviction is not static; it is a cup that gets drained every single day by rejection, smoke screens, and combative prospects 19. To maintain elite performance, sales directors and closers must systematically refill their "Belief Volume" using the following daily protocols:

1. The Daily Testimonial Read: Every morning during the daily huddle, the team must read fresh client testimonials and success stories out loud 20-23. Ideally, the closer who sold that specific Med Spa account should read the testimonial to double down on their own conviction 24, 25. This reminds the team of the real-world impact they are making and sets the emotional cadence for the day 20, 26.
2. Customer Success (CS) Integration: Bring the head of Customer Success into the sales meetings 22, 26. Have them break down exactly how much they pamper our clients after the sale—the onboarding, the campaigns, the ROI delivered 27-30. When closers see the immense value delivered post-sale, they will fight harder to get prospects into that ecosystem 27, 28, 30.
3. Hot-Streak Game Tape Review: When a closer gets on a "hot streak," record and analyze the living hell out of those calls 21, 31, 32. Do not study the calls where you were cold; study the exact pauses, jokes, and tonal shifts you used when your conviction was at its absolute peak so you can replicate it 15, 31, 32.

PART 4: AUDITING FOR "DOUBT-LEAKING" TONALITY

You can have the best script in the world, but the words are only 10% of the equation; 90% is the tonality you use to deliver them 33-36. Conviction naturally corrects your tone 4, 37, 38. When a closer lacks belief, "doubt leaks" directly into their delivery, specifically in the "Red Zone" (the close).

When auditing game tape (via Gong or Zoom), management must listen for these specific tonality failures:

- The Nervous Speed-Up: Closers who lack conviction will rush their words right when they ask for the money. If a rep is speaking faster than the optimal 135-185 words per minute during the close, they are leaking anxiety and destroying trust 39-41.
- The "Pre-Close" Cough or Fidget: A mediocre salesperson will execute the script perfectly but will subconsciously cough, clear their throat, or stutter right before asking for the close 42-44. If they happen to close the deal anyway, they receive positive reinforcement for the cough and will start doing it on every call, sabotaging future deals 45-47.
- Adding Unnecessary Filler Questions: Doubt causes reps to add extra, unscripted questions right before the ask to delay the discomfort of requesting payment 45-47.
- Failure to Pause: The most important time to pause is immediately after asking the prospect to buy. Closers must wait up to 8 seconds in total silence. Reps who fill the silent space are leaking doubt; whoever talks first loses the leverage 41, 48.

The Fix: We do not train reps to "be more confident." We give them behavioral directives 49. We instruct them to speak louder, slow their cadence, articulate every syllable, and hold the pause 39, 40, 50. Once they drill these physical behaviors and fully believe in the Veluse Agency product, their tone will automatically project absolute authority 37, 38, 51.
