

VELUSE AGENCY STANDARD OPERATING PROCEDURE (SOP) DEPARTMENT: Sales & Revenue

SUBJECT: The Tone & Conviction Manual

PURPOSE: To systematically train Veluse Agency consultants to master the emotional and psychological delivery of our sales process. Words speak to the logical brain, but tone speaks to the emotional brain 1-4. The words of a script only account for 10% of persuasion; 90% of your effectiveness relies on how you say those words 1, 5-12.

PART 1: ALEX HORMOZI'S CONVICTION FRAMEWORK

Fundamentally, sales is simply a transference of belief over a bridge of trust 13-20. You cannot transfer conviction to a Med Spa owner if your own "belief cup" is empty 14.

1. Conviction as a Continuum Belief is not a binary "yes or no"; it is a continuum from 1 to 100 15, 21-29. We must ask ourselves: To what extent do I believe in this product? Would I sell this to my own mother? 25, 27, 29, 30. If your conviction is an absolute 100, you will outsell highly skilled veterans because prospects can inherently sense your certainty that this solution will solve their problem 22.

2. The Ultimate Hack: Conviction Corrects Tone You can either trick yourself into having the right tone, or you can train yourself into it 1, 6, 8, 10, 12, 31-34. The ultimate trick is that absolute conviction will naturally and unconsciously correct your tone 6, 8, 10, 12, 32-35. If you truly believe the product is life-changing, your pacing, pitch, and delivery will automatically project authority.

3. Refilling the Conviction Cup A closer's conviction gets drained every day by rejection and combative prospects 36-40. To refill it, our team must read fresh client testimonials out loud daily during the morning huddle 37-39, 41-44. Ideally, the consultant who closed the deal should read it to double down on their own belief 45-48. We also bring Customer Success reps into sales meetings to share wins, proving the immense post-sale value delivered to our clients 37-39, 42-44, 49, 50.

PART 2: THE RULES OF TONALITY

A world-class script is useless if delivered poorly. Veluse Agency reps must master the three constant variables of comprehension and the two variables of emotion 51, 52.

The Three Constants of Comprehension:

1. Volume: You must speak loud enough to be clearly heard 51, 53.
2. Pacing (Speed): You must speak slowly enough to be comprehended. The optimal sweet spot is between 135 and 185 words per minute 51, 54. Speaking too fast erodes trust and projects nervousness; speaking too slowly makes you sound unintelligent 51, 54, 55.
3. Articulation: You must pronounce and round out every word clearly without mumbling 54, 56.

The Variables of Emotion:

1. When to Whisper / Lower Your Voice: When you need to communicate that a point is extremely important, you must lower your voice and slow your pacing 32-35, 57-61. Lowering your volume forces the prospect to lean in and listen closely to the logical weight of your words 32-34, 62, 63.

2. When to Raise Your Voice: Raising your pitch at the end of a statement turns it into a question, even if it is grammatically a statement (e.g., "This is John?") 7, 9, 11, 62, 64. This solicits a response and confirms you are in control 64, 65.
3. Speaking with "Violence": We adopt the Michael Jordan mindset that "violence is the answer" 66. In sales, this does not mean physical aggression; it means absolute, relentless execution, not accepting mediocrity, and attacking the pipeline with unapologetic action 66, 67. You must kill for sport, treating every lead—even unqualified ones—as an opportunity to mercilessly sharpen your sword 68-73.
4. The "Ghetto Tone": A tactical display of confident non-compliance 74, 75. Use a light-hearted, slightly informal tone to push back on unreasonable prospect requests without causing offense (e.g., "Girl, I know you ain't about to leave my gym without putting your weights back") 76-83. This diffuses tension while maintaining absolute frame control 77, 79, 81, 83.
5. Childlike Curiosity ("The Huh"): When a prospect raises a defense, tilt your head, raise your pitch, and say, "Huh... that's interesting" 84-90. This non-threatening tone disarms the prospect, prevents an argument, and buys you time to formulate your next strategic question 86-88, 91, 92.

The Rules for Pausing:

- Short Pauses: Use short pauses (dictated by "..." in our scripts) to draw attention to a specific point and display competence 52, 65.
- The 8-Second Rule (The Close): The most critical time to pause is immediately after asking for the money 93, 94. You must raise your voice slightly on the ask, and then shut the fuck up 65, 95, 96. You must be willing to wait up to 8 seconds in total silence 94. The person who speaks first loses 14, 94. Allow the prospect the silent space required to process their decision and sell themselves 94.

PART 3: THE "BREATHING THE SCRIPT" EXERCISE

If you sound like you are reading a script, it is because you do not know the script well enough 97. A closer must know the script so deeply that they can "breathe" it without thinking 98-103. If you are thinking about what you are going to say next, you are not actively listening to the prospect 98-102.

The Blackout Protocol: To achieve unconscious mastery of the Veluse Agency script, all new consultants must complete this scientifically backed memorization exercise:

1. Print out two physical copies of the master sales script (one to correct yourself from, one to read from) 97, 103.
2. Read the entire script out loud, enunciating every single word clearly 97, 103.
3. Take a thick black marker and cross out/black out one word on the page 97, 103.
4. Read the entire script out loud again, recalling the missing word 97, 103.
5. Go back to the top, black out a second word, and read it again 97, 103.
6. Repeat this process iteratively. By the end of the exercise, you will be staring at a completely blacked-out page and reciting the script flawlessly from memory 102, 103. You have now achieved the ability to "breathe the script" 102, 103.

PART 4: THE 60-MINUTE DAILY TRAINING SCHEDULE

World-class teams train every single day. Consistent daily training is the second most critical variable (behind conviction) for scaling a high-performance revenue department 104-111.

Veluse Agency consultants train 60 minutes a day, 5 days a week using the following breakdown 58-61, 105, 107, 109, 111:

- Minutes 0 - 25: Talking & Tonality Consultants read the script and questions out loud, focusing purely on correct pacing, emphasis, and tonality 58-61, 105, 112-115. If they make a mistake or their tone is flat, they must start again 112-115.
- Minutes 25 - 30: Obstacle Drilling Rapid-fire drilling of the most common Red Zone objections ("I need to think about it," "I don't have the money," "I need to talk to my partner") 58-61, 112-115. Reps must instinctively deploy the AAA (Acknowledge, Associate, Ask) framework without hesitation.
- Minutes 30 - 60: Listening & Game Tape Review The team listens to a 30-minute recording of a real sales call (Game Tape) 58-61, 112-115. The review process is strict: we identify what went right, what went wrong, and exactly what behavioral shift we will make next time 61, 112-115.

Managerial Directive for Role-Play: When conducting one-on-one training, managers must never try to fix six things at once 116-119. You isolate ONE specific bottleneck (e.g., the first 30 seconds of the intro) and make the rep drill it 10, 20, or 30 times in a row until their delivery is perfect 119-129.