

VELUSE AGENCY STANDARD OPERATING PROCEDURE (SOP)
DEPARTMENT: Sales & Revenue Strategy
SUBJECT: The 15-Minute Daily Sales Huddle & Game Tape Protocol
PURPOSE: To establish the militant daily cadence required to maintain absolute conviction and razor-sharp skills across the Veluse Agency sales floor. Salespeople get beat up every single day; their conviction is a cup that constantly drains and must be forcefully refilled by leadership 1, 2. This SOP dictates the exact structure of our daily huddles and the protocols for delivering rapid, high-leverage feedback using Game Tape.

PART 1: THE 15-MINUTE DAILY HUDDLE AGENDA

To scale a world-class sales organization that reliably closes Med Spa AI infrastructure deals, our teams train for 60 minutes a day, 5 days a week 3, 4. The core of this training begins with the mandatory morning huddle. The manager must drive this meeting with high energy to set the emotional baseline for the day.

Minute 0:00 - 0:05 | The Testimonial Read (Conviction Injection)

- The Philosophy: We need to be reminded more than we need to be taught 5. A salesperson getting cussed at or hung up on needs to remember why they are fighting through the rejection 1. If a rep genuinely believes our AI infrastructure transforms Med Spas, they will speak with an unshakable, natural conviction that closes deals 6, 7.
- Execution: Every single morning, the sales manager must read fresh client testimonials and success stories out loud in front of the entire team 1, 8. For maximum impact, have the specific Veluse consultant who closed that Med Spa read the testimonial aloud; this doubles down on their personal conviction 9. This proves to the team that the promises they make on the phone are actually coming true in reality 10.

Minute 0:05 - 0:10 | Leaderboard Visualization & Recognition

- The Philosophy: Salespeople are inherently competitive hunters 11, 12. You must foster that competition by publicly tracking the metrics that matter 13.
- Execution: Display a highly visible, daily-updated leaderboard 13, 14. Publicly recognize the daily leaders and daily winners, and ensure the team is notified whenever another rep closes a deal (e.g., ringing a physical bell or dropping a bell GIF in the company Slack thread) 14, 15. You can also tie status perks to the leaderboard, such as giving the top closer the best parking spot or awarding a striped hat when they hit 100 closes 16, 17. This visible momentum creates urgency and action.

Minute 0:10 - 0:15 | The "Objection of the Day" Drill

- The Philosophy: When a Veluse consultant is in the "Red Zone" (the close), their heart rate spikes and adrenaline hits 18. They cannot be trying to invent answers on the spot. Obstacle overcomes must be pure muscle memory 19, 20.
- Execution: Spend exactly five minutes drilling specific obstacle overcomes 19. Do not role-play the entire script; isolate one specific scenario 21. The manager declares: "Today, we are solely focusing on how we overcome the 'I need to talk to my spouse/business partner' objection. Give me two or three bangs in a row to overcome that obstacle" 22, 23. The reps must fire back the exact scripted response immediately. If they stumble, they start again until they breathe the script effortlessly 19, 24.

PART 2: THE "GAME TAPE" FEEDBACK PROTOCOL

Outside of the morning huddle, managers must conduct one-on-one and team Game Tape reviews. Recording every single call is non-negotiable; if you do not record calls, you cannot study game film to see why deals are dying 24, 25.

1. The Self-Critique Mandate When reviewing a botched call with the team, the manager must never jump down the rep's throat and list everything they did wrong 26.

- Execution: Play the tape, pause it, and force the rep to critique themselves by asking, "What do you think you could have done better?" 27. Most reps already know where they failed when they are forced to listen to themselves 28. Next, the rest of the sales team chimes in to state what the rep did well (e.g., "You had great rapport in the first five minutes") 19, 28. Finally, the manager provides the singular, tactical correction 27.

2. The "Rule of One" (Feedback Isolation) The fastest way to destroy a Veluse consultant's confidence is to give them nine things they did wrong at the end of a role-play 29, 30. They will be incredibly discouraged and will fail to improve any of them 29, 31.

- Execution: The manager must listen to the call at 2x speed beforehand, take notes, and isolate the one or two highest-impact things the rep can do to improve 32, 33. If their rapport building sucks, you spend the entire session strictly practicing rapport building 34, 35. You work on that one specific sentence or tone shift until it is perfect before ever moving to a second critique 36, 37.

3. Fast Feedback Loops & Rapid Repetition The trainability of a human is inversely correlated with how fast they receive feedback 38. If you wait until the end of a 30-minute role-play to tell them they messed up the intro, the feedback is useless.

- Execution: Stop them the exact second they mess up 39. Say: "No, say it again. Try it like this... change your tone there" 34, 35. When they finally say it correctly, do not just move on. You must force them to repeat it flawlessly five or six times in quick succession 39, 40. This rapid-fire repetition drills the phrase into their subconscious, ensuring that when the Med Spa owner gives them an objection live on the phone, the correct response plays back like a mini-recorder 33, 39.
