

VELUSE AGENCY STANDARD OPERATING PROCEDURE (SOP)
DEPARTMENT: Sales & Revenue Strategy
SUBJECT: The Conviction Transfer Audit
PURPOSE: To establish Veluse Agency's protocols for engineering absolute certainty within our sales team. In high-ticket sales, logic dictates the words, but emotion dictates the purchase. Our consultants must possess unshakable belief in our Med Spa AI infrastructure, because doubt is infectious and instantly kills conversions. This SOP outlines how to build, maintain, and audit conviction across the sales floor.

PART 1: THE "EMPTY CUP" VS. "FULL CUP" ANALOGY

Fundamentally, sales is nothing more than a transference of conviction over a bridge of trust 1-5. You have one person (the prospect) who does not believe yet, and another person (the closer) who does believe 6, 7.

To successfully execute this transference, we must view a salesperson's conviction as a cup. You cannot take a cup that is empty—or only one-third full—and attempt to pour it into a prospect's empty cup and expect it to surpass the threshold required for them to make a massive purchasing decision 2. It is impossible.

Furthermore, sales is an attritional job. Our consultants are on the front lines getting beat up all day long by Med Spa owners who are projecting their own fears, skepticism, and doubts 8, 9. Every objection a prospect throws is an attempt to spread doubt into the salesperson 9, 10. Therefore, the closer's conviction is a cup that is constantly being drained 9, 11. It is the explicit duty of Veluse Agency's sales leadership to constantly refill that cup, ensuring our reps are operating with a "Full Cup" before they ever pick up the phone 9.

PART 2: SELLING YOURSELF FIRST (THE BELIEF CONTINUUM)

You cannot sell unless you believe, and prospects will not buy unless they believe you 12, 13. Beginners often treat belief as a binary question: "Do you believe in the product, yes or no?" 14-18.

At Veluse Agency, we recognize that belief is a continuum: To what extent do you believe? 14-18. Your closing percentage is directly multiplied by the depth of your conviction 15, 19.

- The Litmus Test: Would you bet $10,000 on our AI infrastructure working? Would you sell this Med Spa system to your own mother? 20, 21. If the answer is no, you are not fully sold, and you will not be able to close effectively.
- Outworking Self-Doubt: To charge premium, high-ticket prices, our consultants must outwork their self-doubt 22. You must believe so deeply in our solution that when you look at yourself in the mirror at night, alone, your conviction remains unshakable 22, 23. If a rep lacks this baseline of conviction, they have no foundation to work off of, and no amount of tactical script training will fix their close rate 6, 24.

PART 3: DAILY HABITS TO INCREASE "BELIEF VOLUME"

We need to be reminded more than we need to be taught 25-28. To systematically build and maintain "Belief Volume" across the Veluse Agency sales floor, managers must enforce the following operational habits:

1. The Morning Huddle Testimonial Read: Every single morning, the sales director (or the rep who closed the deal) must read fresh client testimonials and success stories out loud in front of the entire team 8, 29-34. This sets the cadence for the day and reminds the team why they are fighting through rejection—they are transforming businesses 8.

2. CS & Sales Cross-Departmental Game Tape: Weekly, bring the Customer Success (CS) team and the Sales team onto the same call 24, 35. Have CS share the wins of the Med Spa clients currently going through the onboarding and implementation phases 36. This gives the sales team fresh ammunition and absolute proof that the promises they make on the phone are being fulfilled in reality 36.
3. Live Client Stories: Actively build a pipeline where highly successful clients hop onto internal calls with the sales team to explain their story and transformation 8, 36. When salespeople witness a client crying tears of joy because their clinic is finally profitable, they will reek of conviction on their very next sales call 7, 37.
4. Fix the Product, Don't Blame the Customer: If conviction drops because reps see bad reviews or failing clients, leadership must take extreme ownership 30, 34. Never blame the Med Spa owner for a lack of success; fix the AI product or the onboarding process so the sales team can regain their absolute ethical high ground 30, 34.

PART 4: AUDITING CALLS FOR "DOUBT-LEAKING" TONALITY

The script's words only account for the logical brain (10%), but how you say those words—your tonality—speaks directly to the emotional brain (90%) 38-42. Conviction naturally and unconsciously corrects a salesperson's tone 43-46. When a rep loses their "mojo" or belief, they begin to leak doubt through their tonality 25.

Sales managers must audit game tape (recorded calls via software like Gong) specifically looking for these "Doubt-Leaking" indicators 47-50:

- The "Nervous Speed-Up": When approaching the close or dropping the price, reps lacking conviction will speed up their speech (talking well over the optimal 135-185 words per minute) 51, 52. This sounds aggressive, nervous, and instantly breaks trust 52, 53.
- Mumbling and Dropped Volume: A convicted rep speaks loudly and clearly 51. If a rep's volume drops or they fail to articulate their words during the price reveal, they are projecting their own financial insecurities onto the prospect 51, 54.
- Superstitious Filler Rituals: Watch for reps who add unnecessary pauses, filler words, or nervous physical ticks—such as coughing right before asking for the close 55-60. If they happen to close a deal after a nervous cough, their brain positively reinforces the bad habit, and they will start systematically coughing before every close as an avoidance mechanism 56, 58, 60.
- The "Hot Streak" Baseline: To correct doubt-leaking tonality, isolate game tape from when the rep was on a "hot streak" (closing deals effortlessly) 29, 61-64. Contrast this baseline tape with their current failing calls 29, 61-64. Have them observe exactly how they paused, how their voice inflected, and how relaxed they were when they truly believed they were going to win 29, 61-64.